

Health, Safety and Wellbeing Policy

The Courier Company formed in 1993 and has the extensive expertise in shipping hazardous, dangerous goods for all UN Classes (1-9) worldwide and to a range of industries and sectors, including healthcare.

We conduct our business operations with the highest commitment to the principal that no person be injured or suffer ill-health as a result of our activities, and so we seek to continuously eliminate hazards and reduce risks.

To support our values for health, safety and wellbeing, we commit to maintain and continually improve a Health and Safety Management System, and to fulfil all applicable legal and other requirements.

We empower all those working on our behalf to stop any activity they believe is unsafe, and through processes for consultation and participation, to be actively involved with health and safety improvements.

Established safe systems of work and safety processes must be complied with by all those working on our behalf. This is considered of the utmost importance, with appropriate action to be taken if our controls are not followed.

Our policy and the health and safety management system that supports it, provides the basis for establishing annual measurable health and safety objectives which are designed to help us evaluate and improve our performance.

We review our policy annually to ensure it remains relevant and meaningful to our health and safety values. And we communicate this policy and the supporting health and safety management system throughout the organisation to ensure all personnel are aware of the commitments and principals it establishes.

We make this policy available to other interested parties on request.
